NO FEE STRUCTURE CHARITABLE INSTITUTION

Established in 1975 under the benevolent guidance of His Holiness the Dalai Lama, the Tibetan Children Village School in Ladakh is a charitable institution. Its primary mission is to offer complimentary education to Tibetan children residing in the Choglamsar and Jangthang region of UT Ladakh. This school is dedicated to providing contemporary education while safeguarding the distinct Tibetan cultural heritage.

The institution's foundation rests upon a set of profound core values, which include nurturing the qualities of being good human beings, fostering intellectual awakening, nurturing the development of vital life skills and self-reliance, and instilling an unwavering commitment to serving others. The school's inclusive approach caters to a diverse student body that includes orphans, semi-orphans, and destitute Tibetan refugee students.

At the heart of its educational philosophy is the nurturing of students into good human beings, instilling within them a deep sense of compassion, empathy, and ethical conduct. The school believes that a strong moral foundation is essential for fostering harmonious relationships within the community and beyond.

Furthermore, the school is dedicated to fostering intellectual awakening. It believes in igniting the flames of curiosity, critical thinking, and creativity in its students. By encouraging a thirst for knowledge and an open-minded approach to learning, the institution empowers its students to explore the vast realms of human understanding.

The development of life skills and self-reliance is another cornerstone of the school's core values. Recognizing the importance of practical knowledge and adaptability in the modern world, the institution equips its students with essential life skills that go beyond textbooks. Through hands-on experiences, problem-solving activities, and real-world applications, students are prepared to confidently navigate the complexities of life.

Additionally, the school places a strong emphasis on the value of self-reliance. By encouraging students to take ownership of their growth and development, the institution fosters a sense of autonomy and resilience. This empowers students to face challenges with determination, continuously improve themselves, and contribute meaningfully to society.

Lastly, the school is deeply committed to the principle of service. Instilling a sense of social responsibility and empathy, it encourages students to give back to their community and beyond. Through various community service initiatives and projects, students learn the significance of making a positive impact and contributing to the betterment of society.

In its pursuit of holistic education, the Tibetan Children Village School in Ladakh strives to embody these core values, creating a nurturing environment that shapes individuals into compassionate, intellectually awakened, skilled, self-reliant, and service-oriented members of society.
